OT Undergarment for privacy

It is not exactly haute-couture or the latest range of Wonderbra, but our humble OT undergarment will go a long way to protect the privacy of our female patients undergoing ambulatory surgery. The current OT gown given to patient is slightly translucent, thus creating awkwardness to female patients who are not allowed to wear their own inner garment on their upper body for safety reasons.

QC team "We Care" felt the anxiety of these female patients. They approached many vendors to create a prototype of an inner garment that is safe to be used in the OT and yet fit patients of all sizes. They turned fashion designers and consultants for the project and designed an OT undergarment for the upper body. Not only is it easy to wear, female patients were now more at ease while waiting to be transferred to the OT. We call this innovation.
